An Example Is A Practical Result Of Good Thinking

Abdulla Nasridinov

ABSTRACT

This article highlights the importance of example in society and human life. It is known from the history of mankind that at certain times in the life of society lived individuals who, while being an example in an entire nation, people and a particular society, contributed to the development and progress of society, some left behind a huge material and spiritual heritage. This has been an example for future generations. Future generations, on the other hand, have analyzed through real-life examples how great and significant this enormous contribution of their ancestors to development in the past has been.

KEYWORDS

Example, daily practice, experience, practical activity, ascension, positive qualities, education.

INTRODUCTION

Mankind has emerged that good deeds and good wishes have been the main driving force of society. Mankind has taken a bold step towards perfection, the stage of perfection, overcoming the difficulties born of such virtues.

The daily practice of making a living has, of course, always caused a lot of problems. The experience of those who solved them easily and wisely has accumulated over the years and has become a golden treasure of humanity. This treasure has become not only an experience but also a model school for generations. The saying, "If you want to be an example to those who come after you, learn from those who came before you" [1. 4] is not in vain. In this regard, in the articles related to the oral tradition of the Uzbek people, one can find a number of valuable ideas about the exemplary life of man, the performance of good deeds. For example, in proverbs such as "Be born as a flower and do not live as a weed", "You were born as a dove, do not die as a crow", "It is better to live a year as a lion than a thousand years” [2.72] while ideas that encourage exemplary life predominate, human dignity and pride are considered to be “supreme values”.

THE MAIN FINDINGS AND RESULTS

Examples are the conclusions that people draw from the most important, best and most useful examples in everyday communication. The most accurate, rational and useful, as well as new, unprecedented solution to the problem of any human activity becomes a model. Others begin to learn from such an example. "Every person affects many people in one way or another." [3] This effect can be both good and bad. Yusuf Khas Hajib writes in this regard: "... those who are the leaders of the majority must be virtuous and adorn themselves with virtues. The peace of the country and the well-being of the people also depend in many ways on whether the leaders are good or bad" [4.27]. Those who base their lives on these guidelines set a good example for others.

If we are talking about goodness and kindness, we can remember many people who have been truly honest, selfless, perfect, kind, and have done great deeds for humanity, following the example of the good from the distant past to our time. Such people will become leaders of the community in their time. From such mature people, in turn, many more generations will learn nobility, tolerance, kindness and gentleness, and most importantly, devotion to people, to put it simply, they will learn from them. There are so many people with such an example in all eras and in all societies that it is because of them that humanity has achieved today's progress and perfection today.

Example (role model, behavioral model) is a term in the sciences of psychology, pedagogy, and sociology that defines individuals and specific actions performed by other people. The term "role model" belongs to sociologist Robert C. Merton, who coined the phrase in the 1950s while working at Columbia University. Merton suggested that individuals compare themselves to reference groups of people who played a social role in which the individual sought. [5]

If you talk to people who are well-known professionals today, who are good for people, they will definitely tell you with passion how they got into the profession. In such cases, many scholars, surgeons, and entrepreneurs who have learned the secrets of science from remote villages say that the activities of a selfless person, any praiseworthy deed or advice he has taken are exemplary.

Usually, the example can come from the advantages of the good, from the strength of the strong. The professionalism, human qualities and devotion of such people can cause a strong flood, especially in the psyche of young people. It mobilizes them to great deeds. On the basis of such an example, many people become fans of very dangerous and complex professions such as piloting and astronautics. They take on complex professions such as surgery, which takes on human life and death. Many young people swear an oath to defend the Motherland, to protect the Motherland, to increase its military power, to acquire military professions. An example can be, in other words, a spiritual support for many, that is, a school of honesty, truthfulness, courage, devotion. Works of art, novels and short stories created in this regard are also of great importance. Dozens of great people have said that some novel had an incomparable effect on their ascent to such heights. Because these works reflect the artistic generalization, that is, the image of real examples of people who can be an example. But it should also be noted that adults are not the only role models in life.

Seeing examples of upbringing, devotion, humanity in young children, adults can be very impressed by this, and great habits such as honesty, which have already emerged in young people, can change the lives of adults in another direction. There are many examples of this, not only today, but even from afar.

People who can set an example have always been the flower of their society. In this world of light, the righteous kings of the past have been epic in languages for centuries. Philosophers who have led people to goodness with their extremely noble and noble ideas, advanced science and wisdom, and scientists who have advanced the ideas of humanity have always been examples in life. Let us pay attention to the thoughts and slogans of Amir Temur Koragon, who rose from an ordinary family to the rank of a great head of state and commander in his book "The Story of Timur": "Let me know and understand the white light hearts of the last happy children and well-wishers, that I have made twelve works my motto and profession. That is why God gave me glory, supported me with heavenly power, and promoted me to the rank of sultan. One of them is that I have taken the scales of justice in my hands, I have neither done less nor more, I have weighed everyone equally".

When I inspected the activities of a man who had sacrificed his life to build a great state, who had traveled for years and spent his life on horseback, I said, "I have done justice to everyone," "I have avoided useless work," "I have not offended anyone," "I have spoken the truth," "I have heard the truth", is it not one of the noblest virtues of humanity? Or who can say that these principles of Timur the Great are ideas other than the basic roots of modern democracy? The fact that Amir Temur rightly judged and supported the right side in solving problems, showed compassion to everyone, and most importantly did not refuse to communicate with every ordinary person is one of the golden principles of modern democracy! Such vital slogans of the leader of the country can serve the development of any society, a human society can only begin with goodness. In short, from every motto of Amir Temur, even the current leader can be a role model.

In fact, the observations show that the highest peak of human intelligence, the development of thinking, occurs in the period from 3-5 years of age. So it is at this age that the foundation of our future is laid. It is during this period that the child receives basic information about existence. During this period, children mainly learn from their parents. What fathers and mothers always look like in front of their children can serve as the foundation of many positive qualities in children. It is during this period that parents should never forget their responsibilities.

The main idea that we focus on in our lives is that mothers are the role models for girls and fathers are the role models for boys. In general, such qualities as the courageous behavior of fathers, demanding, respect for the elderly, kindness and humility of the mother are very necessary and important for the perfect people of tomorrow.

Reflecting on the example, it should also be noted that independence has allowed us to pursue our dreams and aspirations based on our own desires. Until then, we were doomed to live in a society that sought completely different destinations, striving to deprive different peoples of their identity, their ancient values, and to create an unbelieving soviet people. Our way of life has fallen into disrepair because of independence. Our traditions of perfection, democracy based on kindness, compassion and humanity have become the destinations we are called to today. The scientific directions of such a noble path have been carefully developed in connection with the scientific and practical work and activities of our great ancestors.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, it should be noted that:

First, we need to use a very influential and important factor, such as example, wisely and effectively in educating our youth. When we do this, upbringing will be able to bear its necessary and desirable fruits more quickly.

Second, striving for past thinkers and ancestors of the past is a bright path that will lead us not only to live well, but also to build a more perfect, exemplary civil society in which perfect people live.
