INTRODUCTION

A teacher is, first and foremost, always a creative person. He is the organizer of the daily life of his students. Through the scale of his personal activities, the teacher demonstrates his will and tries to engage students in science. The teacher in the classroom is a teacher, a leader, an educator, an inventor, a professional who is fast, determined and always ready to solve any situation independently.

The prestige of this profession can be enhanced only by the teacher’s selfless work, tireless work and setting an example for others that can be seen by the effect of ongoing reforms in all areas it depends on highly qualified personnel with innovative thinking and modern knowledge. Personnel training is primarily the responsibility of teachers and coaches. For this reason, well-educated, modern teachers are considered an important factor in our development.

USED MATERIALS AND METHODS

In folklore, phrases such as “Teacher is as great as your father” glorify teachers and increase their respect for them. Since past time, humanity has increased the demand for teachers, wanting them to be free from all imperfections. In the correspondence of 1586, the following requirements were set for the teachers: “The teacher of the school must strive for good qualities such as pious, thoughtful, humble, but at the same time wise, polite, free from alcohol, kind, far from dreamy”.

At the beginning of the XVII century, the well-known founder of the world pedagogy Ya. A. Comenius said that the main goal of the teacher was: “To Carry out educational work on the basis of humanity, which can demonstrate high personal morality, love for people, knowledge, diligence and other qualities, to become a leading expert in his field”[1].

When a good teacher comes to school, the quality of education increases. After then we can achieve the result. What to do for this? First of all, our schools should become a place where the best teachers come.

Our teachers have modern knowledge; they should have the content of the updated education. Teachers must constantly improve their professional and teaching skills [2, p.40]. Otherwise, this warns the teacher of negligence and encourages him to choose the optimal means of influence in a particular situation. The teacher’s professional tactic is to have a sense of balance in communicating with the student. Etiquette is a concentrated expression of the educator’s consciousness, emotions, and general culture. Its main purpose is to respect the identity of the student. Personal qualities in the teaching profession are inseparable from professional qualities.

Many experts limit themselves to the conclusion that the lack of specific skills can be compensated by the development of other professional qualities, in fact, the ability is formed through diligence, honest attitude to their duties, constant work on themselves.

We must recognize pedagogical skills (talent, profession, inclination) as an important condition for the successful acquisition of a pedagogical profession, but in any case, the decisive condition remains innate professionalism. Many candidates for the teaching profession, despite their professional aspirations, have not been able to fully fulfill their teaching duties because they did not have the ability to communicate their knowledge and interest in science. Despite all the opportunities, there are also teachers who are not good at managing the audience.

Therefore, the important professional qualities of a teacher are diligence, efficiency, discipline, responsibility, ability to set goals, as well as ways to achieve them, perseverance, regular and systematic improvement of professional level, training, the desire to constantly improve the quality of the product. Every teacher has their own way, style and way of teaching. “In educating the young soul - give them a tuft like sunlight”[3, p.45] - said K.D. Ushinsky.

People have always set very high standards for teachers. First of all, the teacher must have a deep and multifaceted knowledge, an idea of how to effectively convey concepts in the field of science. The main basis of human education - to gain the trust of the child, to become a reliable friend of his students aspects such as the ability to advise are an indication of how important an educator is. Any curriculum, any method of education, no matter how good, if the teacher does not gain the trust of the student, will remain “dead letters and correspondence” on paper, but in fact, if the trust is justified, this is the case will have an effective impact force.

If we talk about a number of requirements for a modern teacher, first, the Master should set an example of spiritual life in his personal behavior, attitude to life, to educate students based on human qualities, high ideals of truth and goodness is mandatory. An important requirement for a teacher today is the availability of pedagogical skills as a person who can demonstrate a love for working with students, love for children and the pleasure of interacting with them. According to many surveys, the leading teachers are professionals who are always able to demonstrate their abilities and pedagogical competence.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSIONS

Educating a person is a very complex process, and from the past time, mature members of society have been involved in this activity. This situation means that the upbringing of the younger generation, the content of which is important not only for the development of the individual, but also for the development of society.

Essential professional qualities of a teacher are knowledge, creativity, thirst for innovation, perseverance and self-control, leadership, kindness to the student, not nervous about small things. The unique professional quality of a teacher is fairness. He has to systematically assess students' knowledge, skills and actions based on the nature of his work. Therefore, it is important that its assessments are appropriate to the level of development of the students. They evaluate objectivity. Nothing enhances a teacher's moral reputation as an ability to be objective. Partisanship is very harmful to education. What should a modern English teacher look like? Even nowadays, scientific research on this issue continues.

In the 21st century, the role of the English teacher is becoming more and more sophisticated. The emotional sensitivity of the teacher is to feel the student's mood, their mood, to help those in need, and to act as a barometer whenever possible in learning foreign languages. The natural state of a teacher is that it is important for the student to have a sense of professional care and personal responsibility, caring for the present and the future. The teacher must be demanding. This is the most important condition for its successful operation. A teacher sets high standards for himself because others cannot demand what he does not have. Pedagogical demands must be reasonable, taking into account the capabilities of the developing individual.

(In the world standards)..... There are strict requirements for the moral character, intellectual competence and professionalism of teachers. Based on the above considerations, the content of the requirements for today's teacher is understood.

Now global change, science and technology and information and communication, the development of technology requires an English teacher to have high skills, willpower, psychological strength, deep knowledge and thinking.

In educational activities with students, teachers need to involve children in the process of cooperation in order to achieve a specific goal. With the in-depth study of foreign languages, of course, Uzbek is teaching as our main language. There can be no doubt about it.

21st-century learning means teaching just as you have done in the past centuries but with way better tools. Today's teachers have a great advantage: they have powerful learning tools at their disposal that they did not have before. 21st-century technology is an opportunity for students to acquire more knowledge. Teachers have the ability to move away from being the dispenser of information to someone who can guide them and prepare them for their future [4]. Ultimately, the 21st-century learner will be "learner-driven," where they choose how and what they want to learn. The teacher will serve as a facilitator and guide to help embrace 21st-century learning [5].

CONCLUSION

An effective modern educator must be able to collaborate and work well in a team. Working with others is an important modern skill. Over the past few years, being able to collaborate effectively in the workplace has grown quite rapidly. Learning is deemed more effective when you can share your ideas and knowledge with others. Sharing your expertise and experience, communicating and learning from others, and being able to self-reflect is an important part of the learning and teaching process.

In conclusion, the external, aesthetic aspect of teacher perception is also important for students. Students' interest in the formative stage is more prone to the effects of labile and environmental conditions. Therefore, it can be concluded that the process of teaching and learning takes place in the process of communicating with the teacher, and this is no less than accepting students as individuals with their advantages and disadvantages, because in its development shows the mystery among whom the teacher is not the last.

In short, pedagogy should shape a person who can demonstrate the rules of creativity. This approach expands the scope of scientific views, but also leads to their gradual movement towards integrity. Only by understanding the norms and rules of one's natural structure can one become a true professional. Moreover, this new unity paves the way for the formation of the future teacher.
